Edwin Goodall on Local Sugar
Industry.

SAYS TOURISTS
WILL FLOCK HERE

He Talks of Diversified Industries,
Water Supply and the Sugar Tariff.

Staying at the Hawaiian Hotel is Edwin Goodall of the firm of Goodall, Perkins & Company, controllers of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, one of the biggest shipping concerns on the coast. The company owns 23 steamers operating along a line of coast 5000 miles in length, and extending from Mexico to Alaska.

Mr. Goodall stated to a reporter last night that he came here at the advice of his physician in hopes of recruiting his health, which has been indifferent of late. He intends to remain in the Islands for a month longer. He denied that his visit had any business significance whatever and said that the Pacific Coast Steamship Company did not contemplate extending their business to Hawaii as had been rumored.

Mr. Goodall expressed himself as being charmed with the country as much as he had seen of it, and predicted a rosy future for the tourist trade.

"I expect to see the tourist traffic to the Islands increase almost immediately," said he. "This season there are more tourists in Southern California than ever before and, to put it plainly, there will undoubtedly be a stop over of which Hawaii will reap the benefit. I am sure that if the beauties of this place were thoroughly made known in the States, together with its manifold and unique attractions, people would flock here as they now do to California, Florida and Colorado. It wouldn't cost them a great deal more and they would be able to gratify the insatiable hungering of humankind for something at once new and beautiful."

Mr. Goodall does not look for any immediate probable combination of circumstances or development in connection with the sugar situation on the mainland, which need give those most interested in the local industry cause for alarm. A twenty per cent reduction in the tariff on sugar he is inclined to regard as almost a foregone conclusion. At the same time Mr. Goodall harps upon the much hackneyed string of diversified industry.

"Of course I know that any views I may express must necessarily be more or less superficial," remarked he, "but I do think that Hawaii leans too much toward sugar. A lone industry, prosper it never so much, may be unlooked for and untoward happenings become but a broken reed to lean upon in time of trouble, and there is no guarantee that while everything looks rosy at present, the lean years may not come, provoked by some extraordinary circumstance or combination of circumstances."

"There's the question of water. I am amazed at the quantity of water that you pump from your artesian wells for plantation purposes. Why, I am told that as much water is used on a single plantation in one month as is consumed by the inhabitants of a large city in the same space of time. If this is so, is there not great danger of exhausting the subterranean supply of water? Of course the water may percolate from the surface and thus replenish the constant drain, but of this I know nothing and only mention the matter as it occurs to me at first blush."

"Change of administration accompanied by a removal of duty is another thing which would ruin the local sugar industry, and which comes within the range of possibilities. Then again the prolonged presence of an epidemic in your land and the corresponding quarantining of Hawaiian sugar would deal your industry a blow which would paralyze it."

"For these three reasons and others which I could mention, I think that Hawaii should set about developing other industries, one of which I have every reason to believe could be successfully and profitably prosecuted here, being the production of rubber, the demand for which, today, almost exceeds the supply."

Mr. Goodall's partner is Senator Perkins of California. Mrs. Goodall is accompanying her husband on the trip.
